PARNELL IS DEAD.

The Man Who Nearly Won Home Rule for Ireland

AND THEN RENDERED IT IMPOSSIBLE.

Died Suddenly, After a Brief Illness, at Brighton—His Death Almost Universally Regarded as a Blessing for His Countrymen.

DUBLIN, Oct. 7.—No event of the last century has so startled the people of this city as did the announcement, at an early hour this morning, of the death of Mr. Parnell, the Irish leader, last night. The bulletin boards conveyed unexpected tidings in letters a foot long to the workmen hurrying to their various occupations. At the railway stations the news was posted in conspicuous places to catch the eyes of the incoming throngs from the suburban towns. In front of the post-office, the rotunda, Nelson's monument and a score of prominent places along the great thoroughfares, Sackville street, announcements of the death of the Irish leader, which excited universal regret, were posted. Men, women and children alike seemed to be stunned by the words which stoned them in the face. It was noticeable that no expression of political feeling was heard among the groups who were gathered to discuss the death of the Irish chief.

Up to the present hour (1 p.m.) the telegraph offices, the office of the Freeman's Journal and that of every other newspaper in the city have swelled to a people's organ of record, continually looking for some particulars of the taking off of the great leader. Up to this time, however, nothing but the mere announcement of the fact and cause of death have been received.

Dispatches from Cork say that the news of the death of Mr. Parnell has caused a panic in that city. So absolutely unexpected was it that the announcement that at 10 p.m. he died was received as a cause, but the confirmation of its death, as quickly crowding upon its heels. The personal and political friends of the dead man are overwhelmed with grief, and those who loudly and hotly opposed him in life-to-day maintain a dignified and respectful silence. The death has come suddenly upon the people of Cork that as yet nothing has been done there in the way of formal action in the matter. Meantime the wireless cable between Cork and Dublin is afloat with dispatches of inquiry and sympathy.

Another account says that it was on Thursday after returning to Brighton that Mr. Parnell found himself compelled to take to his bed, and that on the Friday following a medical consultation was held. On Sunday the physicians again came together and at one o'clock the O'Shea funeral director disclosed our people. Parnell has been a source of irritation and the cause of Ireland has been injured by the contention. I think now all this will be ended at once. Parnell has done great work for Ireland, and deserved all the popularity he once enjoyed, but since that unfortunate affair he has been an obstruction to the progress of our cause. All facts will now come together and the world will go on.

Mr. McCarthy will regular and that a head leader of a united Irish party will be chosen. I think the new leader will be Dillon.

Parnell was a man of great mental endowment but he was no orator or public advocate. His speeches were sometimes flat, but he was a shrewd and able leader, and at his best did great work for Ireland. He was the coldest man I ever saw. He could not be moved by anything.

Michael Davitt—No Harsh Words for Parnell.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—No event in recent Irish political history has produced such a sensation among Irish-Americans as the announcement of the death of Charles Stewart Parnell. Nobody anticipated Mr. Parnell's death, and all the publications of the Irish press, which had so markedly become characteristic of the home rule movement were based on Parnell's apparently inflexible determination to continue the fight upon the lines laid down in his manifesto, notwithstanding his final separation from the great majority of his colleagues.

Michael Davitt could hardly believe the news of Parnell's death. It was apparently the last thing that he expected to hear. "What can such a man do?" he said, "what I can do, I believe, is it is not possible that there has been some mistake?" When assured that the news had been confirmed, he said: "I regret exceedingly, from a personal standpoint, the death of Parnell. I regret it because it is sad to speculate on the brilliant future that Charles Stewart Parnell had and the great opportunity that fell to him to immortalize himself as a patriot in the cause of Ireland. I regret it because that such a high utterance will be delivered over the grave of Mr. Parnell, and that many if not all of the anomalies that have existed among the people of Ireland recently will be buried out of sight never to be resurrected.

McCarthy and Chamberlain on the Irish Crisis.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Mr. Justin McCarthy, as usual, said in an interview, that it would be impossible to forecast the political effect of the death of Mr. Parnell. He hoped that it would lead to the reunion of the Irish party and it would certainly not hinder the cause of home rule. He believed that all Irish leaders would co-operate with Mr. Parnell in carrying out his programme. There will be a cordial reunion now of the Irish contingent in Parliament and the English liberals under practically one leadership.

"Parnell consulted me" said Mr. McCarthy, "about his lamentable manifesto, and used his efforts to prevent its being issued because it made his leadership impossible."

Mr. Watson Mackay said the death of Parnell would reunite the factions in home rule and that it would strengthen the hands of Gladstone and the liberal party. Parnell certainly rendered important services to Ireland by the discipline of organization which he introduced. He thought if it had not been for the O'Shea matter, Parnell would have been as great a man in the cause of the Irish as Charles O'Conor. Parnell lived just one year too long for poor health for about a year.

A Fat Pocketbook

A fat pocketbook is a handy thing to have around. It is, in fact, something that almost anybody can use to advantage. A great many people do not carry one because they have not exercised the proper forethought. Fat pocketbooks grow from small savings—like giant oaks from little acorns. Cents make dollars, dollars make fortunes. Almost anybody can have a fat pocketbook by saving and investing a few cents a day in the EQUITABLE BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY OF PEORIA. Thirteen cents a day will grow to One Thousand Dollars in ten years. Money deposited the same as in a savings bank. Interest is compounded on it every month. Women and children may carry stock.
